“From Tunis to Tripoli: Analysing the Arab Spring”

Panelists

Ahmed Ben Aessa, University of Glasgow

Keith Hammond, University of Glasgow

Anthony Lang, University of St. Andrews

Adham Saouli, University of Edinburgh

Chair: Kurt Mills, University of Glasgow

2011 has witnessed an amazing series of events in the Middle East which will have widespread, global repercussions for decades to come.

Authoritarian regimes have been overthrown in some countries, violent repression has increased in others, and the international community has invoked both the International Criminal Court and the evolving responsibility to protect norm and militarily intervened in Libya. These ongoing situations do not have clear outcomes but will, nonetheless, have a significant impact on regional and global dynamics.

The scholars on this panel will draw on their expertise to help us understand what has happened in this volatile part of the world and what the possible implications might be.
